Taxation of Digital Goods and Services: A Budget that Disadvantages Canadian Businesses

MONTRÉAL, February 27, 2018 - In response to the tabling of the federal budget, the Coalition for Culture and Media deplores Ottawa's inaction on the taxation of digital goods and services sold in Canada by foreign companies. The Coalition is all the more disappointed as it has been making appeals on this issue for several months, has collected thousands of signatures in support of said demands, and unfortunately finds itself faced with the government's complete insensitivity to arguments for tax fairness.

The Coalition, like many players in the Quebec and Canadian economy, finds it inconceivable that the Canadian government should maintain an unfair taxation system that favours foreign companies doing business here using the Internet. This two-tier system exempts these foreign entities from having to collect sales taxes on the goods and services sold here, unlike Quebec and Canadian companies. Federal tax policy needs to be updated to level the playing field for companies competing online. The digital economy is no longer on the fringe of our national economy—it is a key segment of it.

The Coalition for Culture and Media will continue to pressure the Trudeau government on this issue and expects Quebec Finance Minister Carlos Leitão to make good, in his next budget, on his promise to require the collection of QST in any online transaction conducted in Quebec, regardless of the origin of the good or service.

In its Declaration for the sustainability and the vitality of national culture and media in the digital era, published in September, the Coalition raised the issue of fairness in the taxation of e-commerce, a problem that is profoundly impacting the cultural and media industry. The Coalition calls on governments to restore fiscal and regulatory fairness, to act with continuity, and to implement effective measures to support national culture and media.
